Storytime Rhyme of the Week

Dragon Song

(Tune: My Bonnie)
A dragon flew over our house
He landed right next to a tree
We asked him to stay for some dinner
And he ended up eating me.

Chorus

He ate, he ate, he ate me all up, all up. He ate, he ate, he ate me all up. It's very dark inside a dragon I didn't like it at all I started to tickle his tummy He laughed from summer to fall.

The dragon got tired from laughing His mouth opened and I ran out "Don't eat anymore little children," I said. He said, "Sorry," and started to pout.

SCAM ALERT

Scam of the Week

Scary New Social Engineering Attack Turns Off Your Power

OK, better get thinking about generators and 1,000 gallon drums of fuel to keep your data center up & running

(which you should have done anyway for your disaster recovery plans...)

A new attack vector that bypasses all your software defenses has been discovered by Israeli cybersecurity company Cyberint. At the moment the bad guys are targeting US and UK energy companies which could cause power cuts and even cost lives, but this tactic could be used against anyone.

Here is how it plays out. A "honey-doc" masquerades as a resume attached to a harmless email. Both email and attachment are totally clean and contain no malicious code whatsoever. That's what makes them undetectable to any kind of incoming email filter.

However, the Word doc is weaponized with a template reference that, when the document is loaded, connects to the attacker's server via Server Message Block and downloads a Word template which has an extremely well-hidden malicious payload.

The connection to the SMB server also provides the attacker with the victim's credentials, which can then be used to acquire sensitive information and/or infiltrate the network and/or control systems used by the targeted employee.

The campaign appears to have started in May, and as it is targeted at infrastructure control systems of US and UK energy companies, it's not too hard to guess who is behind it.

The problem is that once this type of attack is out there in the wild (remember StuxNet?) all kinds of bad guys get their hands on it. To protect against this type of attack, you want to step your employees through new-school security awareness training so that they do not fall for social engineering tactics like this.

Polaris Tip of the Week

Periodical Volume Number Procedure

Please pay close attention procedures for entering dates on your Polaris periodical item links. Entering date data in the Volume field of the item link has to be performed for every periodical. You can continue to add dates in the Call number field of the item link, but the current procedure requires entering specifically formulated dates in the Volume field.

Title	Collection	Material Type	Call Number	Volume	Status
People	Adult Periodical (APER)	Magazine	PER	2016/02/08	In
People	Adult Periodical (APER)	Magazine	PER	2016-02-15	Out

Here are some helpful hints on how to transcribe a date from the periodical to the Volume field of the Polaris item link:

- Dates to be entered into the Vol. field should be derived from the title page of the periodical. Do not use cover or spine dates, if possible.
- Enter year first month second specific date third 2011 05 30
- It is critical that you do not forget to insert hyphens between sections of the transcribed date.
 DO NOT use slashes (\or /), or blanks.

In the left-hand column below there are examples of publication dates found on a title page. The right-hand column is how they should be transcribed into the Vol. field. Note: This is not a comprehensive listing of all possible dates that might be encountered. When in doubt, ask for help.
